Astrology in the Garden: From Flowers to Herbs

with Liz Howell, Astrologer and Founder of Celestial Living Arts

Most people turn to astrology with questions about love, marriage, career, health, and timing on things like weddings, promotions and parenthood. But rarely does one think to consult an astrologer when deciding what to plant under the Capricorn New Moon or how to creatively spice up a new culinary dish with botanicals from the garden. It is a little known fact that the centuries-old interpretive science of astrology has long-standing and traditional ties with foods, vegetation and herbs. Learn more about each of the signs and their preferred tastes and styles when it comes to culinary and herbal classifications.

About The Presenter:

Liz Howell's passion for exploring the connections in the body to the world(s) around us has been a life-long journey spanning a professional dance career in New York City to a somatic healing arts practice in Hawaii. Her ongoing study of herbal and culinary science has taken her on treks to Bali and into the kitchens and gardens of some of the finest restaurants around the world. Now in Portland, OR, she and her company, Celestial Living Arts, are thriving with the region's passion for green, sustainable and eco-conscious living. Much of the experimentation and research conducted on the botanical astrology theories are tested in her own urban neighborhood garden in the heart of the historic Northwest section of Portland, OR. Her interests include astrology, healing arts, herbology, gardening, metaphysics . . . and, of course, cooking.
